Abstract Of The Disclosure

A strobe light responds to both an input voltage range of about 8-40 volts and a selectable candela output. A programmed processor stores a plurality of electrical parameters which correspond to respective selectable candela. For repetitive fixed periods, the light is repetitively driven by a variable duty cycle signal that takes into account both applied voltage and selected candela output.

5